CONCLUSION

This field trip study has given students an opportunity to learn beyond the walls of their classrooms and engage all their senses. For many students, these trips may be the start of new experiences and a newfound appreciation for dairy farming. From learning about the milking and bottling process to watching for the first time, students are able to take the knowledge they gained in class and watch it come to life. The visit was very useful for the students as they could now relate theoretical knowledge with the practical exposure which they have gained after visiting this trip. Overall, it was a good learning experience for the students.
